Different Passes When playing sports such as tag rugby passing is very important - these are the three key passes .	Word	Definition	Rugby (Tag Rugby) Rugby is played between two teams of 15 or 13 (Rugby Union & Rugby League) Like Rugby - in Tag Rugby, the ball must only be passed sideways or backwards. A try is scored when the ball is placed on the ground (with downward pressure) behind the opponents tryline. The team with the highest number of tries wins the match. Tag Rugby drills involve passing and handling drills
	Attack	To try and score a try over your opponents tryline
Basic Pass Two hands must be on the ball at all times. Hold the belly (widest part) of the ball and swing your arms across your body to release the ball. The ball should be above your hip.	Defend	To protect your tryline from your opponents
	Invasion	This is the aim of the game - to attack the other team's territory to score a try.
Spin or Spiral Pass This is the same set-up as the basic pass with one exception - the ball is spun through the air with the lower hand twisting the ball on release.	Pass	To successfully send and receive the ball from a team mate.
	Possession	When you or teammates have the ball
Pop Pass This pass is very similar to the basic pass. It should be used when passing to a teammate who is close to you. The ball should simply be popped into the air and hang there for a teammate to run on to. This is the easiest type of pass to catch as a receiver. Hold the ball vertically. Flex your fingertips in an upward motion.	Receive	Taking possession of the ball from a teammate. The W shape is very important here.
	Send	Using your hands to push the ball to a teammate.
	Tag	Each player has two tags attached to a belt. When a tag is removed by an opponent, they have 3 steps & 3 seconds to pass the ball.
Catching the ball To catch the ball, hands should be in front of your body and in the W shape or Oval shape with your fingertips spread.	Try	To touch the ball down in your opponents in-goal area - past the tryline.
